

Financial disclosures to associations and inherent risks 3/43/21

The increasing role associations play in society and certain industries raises questions about data the associations use in their activities and communications, which is often obtained from their members. We should not forget that any association is governed by the Competition Act and that associations and their members, just like any market participant, are subject to its requirements, including restrictions on how commercially sensitive information may be transferred, gathered, and made available to association members. What rules do the members have to follow when it comes to disclosing financial data to their association?
