

Adverse consequences of widening State Revenue Service's powers (3/37/19)

At various stages of their control measures, the State Revenue Service (SRS) has the power to apply means of securing enforcement of their potential decisions. The SRS's powers were expanded on this matter a year ago, and this expansion is affecting any entities and individuals that are being scrutinised by the SRS. However, those newly acquired powers appear to be exercised in a formal manner improperly restricting taxpayers' rights.
